Dear Elder Froom:

Your letter of January 28 is before me.

You state, "You have come to your conclusions and I have learned that when you do so, that is the end of it for you."

This, I think dear elder, is judging your brother. Your implication is that once I have come to conclusions, no amount of evidence will cause me to change my apparently wrongful conclusion.

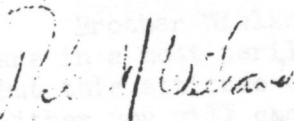

I would kindly point out to you that never in the years that we have corresponded have you ever done me the favor of supplying me with Spirit of Prophecy evidence. This you have explicitly declined to do.

"I somehow wish we could work together, share together some of these things." The "sharing" would have to be one-sided, for you are the scholar in possession of the evidence, you say. Fine; I am happy to have you share the evidence with me.

And do pray for your brother that he may not be as unwilling to consider inspired evidence as your letters have assumed him to be.

With kind personal regards

Sincerely yours,

Robert J Wieland
